

Poverty Solutions, Detroit Partnership on Economic Mobility

Detroit, MI

The Detroit Partnership on Economic Mobility, a signature initiative of Poverty Solutions at U-M, seeks an intern for Summer 2024. The intern will report to Sam Stragand, Senior Program Manager of the Detroit Partnership on Economic Mobility at Poverty Solutions.

Summary

The Detroit Partnership on Economic Mobility is a partnership between Poverty Solutions at U-M, the City of Detroit, and community-based organizations across the city, focused on reducing poverty in Detroit. Poverty Solutions staff – together with our faculty experts – conduct action-oriented research to help inform, enhance, and evaluate collective efforts to improve economic opportunity in the city, and galvanize collective action from government, philanthropy, and non-profits around core economic mobility issues. We have a Detroit-based team that works closely with City departments and community groups across the city; we engage undergraduate and graduate research assistants from across the university to support our work; and we fund faculty research projects that shed new light on some of the most persistent problems facing Detroit residents, as well as potential solutions.

We pride ourselves on working in partnership with community in everything we do, co-creating our research agenda based on the concerns and needs of both residents and city leaders. We seek to confront and eliminate racism of all kinds through these research priorities and practical engagement. We view poverty as the result of many interlinked systems that fail to operate as they should for those with low incomes. Therefore, we work not in one area, but within and across a variety of systems, enabling us to intervene in a number of domains to make concrete improvements in the lives of Detroit residents with low incomes.

The Detroit Partnership on Economic Mobility is seeking a research intern to work on Partnership projects in the summer of 2024. The intern will work with Poverty Solutions staff on action-oriented projects that may include:

- Researching national leading practices to reduce poverty and improve economic well-being;
- Analyzing quantitative and qualitative data for a large-scale evaluation of a local city-led community violence intervention program;
- Writing research briefs on innovative solutions that can be deployed at the local level to ease housing cost burden and reduce barriers to employment;
- Collaborating with the Detroit Reparations Task Force to assist with researching and writing a harms report and accompanying policy recommendations; and
- Assisting with other data and research projects as needed.

Applicant Requirements

- Excellent verbal and written communication skills;
- Ability to work well under the direction of others and to take ownership of projects independently;
- Experience collecting a large amount of information, and distilling results into action-oriented policy briefs;
- Strong skills in Excel, and ability to master new software applications;
- Ability to maintain a high level of accuracy in collecting and analyzing data; and
- Effective organizational skills.

Location

This position will be remote, with an option to use Poverty Solutions' offices in Detroit or Ann Arbor if the candidate prefers.

Application Process

Students interested in being considered for these internships should submit a resume and a one-page statement of interest. In your statement, you are encouraged to identify your interest in working on poverty reduction and improving economic well-being, and the skills/experience you would bring to the team. Please also highlight policy areas that are of particular interest to you. You may wish to describe your career interests and discuss your previous work and educational experiences demonstrating these interests. Materials will be reviewed as they are received and should be submitted by Monday, March 18, 2024. Submit to stragand@umich.edu and betrevor@umich.edu.

The position will be paid at a rate of $18/hr, in-line with our pay rate for all graduate students. The individual employed in this role can work up to 40 hours per week and can work as many weeks as they are able to between academic terms. Poverty Solutions and the chosen candidate will come to an agreement on the exact term of employment.

Transportation, lodging, and expenses for the internship are the responsibility of the student. The position is remote, but individuals can work from the Detroit Center at 3663 Woodward Ave if they prefer. The internship is available to graduate students from the University of Michigan. Poverty Solutions will work with units on campus to ensure the internship meets any designated internship requirements.
